Bio:

Harper Fair is perhaps the world's youngest recording artist. All of the songs for her first album were completed before her second birthday.

Harper's vocals celebrate her early flirtation with the English language. She was born half way around the world and had only heard English for a few months when this project began. Her father (David Fair) first recorded her voice as she pronounced the phrase "Oopsy daisy". The intention at that point was merely to preserve the innocence of her early attempt. Before long, though, he decided to set the words to music. The next day he held little Harper up to a microphone and encouraged her to say any of the few English words that she could pronounce. She repeated her name several times between giggles. From that recording the title track was realized. They continued in this manner producing songs at the rate, generally, of one per day. Her brother, Robinson Fair, played guitar on one of the songs and her best friend, Emma Zychowski, added vocals to another.

Harper enjoys singing and dancing. She is learning Chinese and American Sign Language, as well as English. She loves Pee-Wee's Playhouse and They Might Be Giants.

David Fair, on the other hand, has recorded hundreds of songs with his brother Jad Fair and Half Japanese, CooCooRockinTime, XXOO, The Tinklers, The Abraham Lincolns, Barbara DeCesare, Old Songs, BigFair, Glory Glory and CanCan.

Quotes: (David Fair)

David Fair's music has been described as

"the part of the Stooges the Ramones threw away"

"the sound of cutlery being dropped, enthusiastically"

"a miracle for the ears and heart"

"an American treasure".
